ABSTRACT

The Effects of Index Storage on Ranked Information Retrieval

James E. Manthey, Jr.

Information retrieval is the process of recalling and ordering all relevant documents based on a user's search query. Examples of information retrieval systems are Google, Bing, and Yahoo search. In order to perform an effective search, these systems utilize an inverted index for mapping content, such as words, to the original document. It is widely believed there are two options for implementing an inverted index and these options are in memory or as a file. This investigation looks at implementing an inverted index as a table in a database as compared to the other two options. In addition, this investigation will look at the optimal combination of inverted index implementation to retrieval algorithms such as TD-IDF, Best Match 25, and a unigram model with Jelinek-Mercer smoothing. This is determined by designing and developing a system which will index and search three different collections of various data, size, and complexities. By doing this, it is found that utilizing an inverted index implemented in a database is a viable option for information retrieval. It is also noteworthy that Best Match 25 or a unigram language model consistently outperforms TD-IDF. In conclusion, if the collection cannot be indexed in memory, then utilizing a database implemented index is a sufficient second option.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to take a moment to recognize those who have made my thesis, my college career, and all that I am blessed to have in my life. To my fiancée Ashley, whose faith in me and all her sacrifices that allowed to achieve all my goals over the past two years. My parents and sister whom have always been there for me even in the toughest of times and supported me in whatever endeavors I have taken on during my college career. To my grandparents who have open their home to me during the past 6.5 years as a shelter from the insanities of college.

I would like to take this time to recognize my advisor and mentor Dr. Roy S. Nutter, Jr. who convinced me to come back to West Virginia University and seek my Masters degree. His advice has been like a compass in guiding me towards excellences in and out of the classroom. To Dr. Bojan Cukic, who tried to understand my documents and my thinking when guiding me in selecting and developing my thesis. Dr. Tim Menzies, who taught to me go beyond the applicable and expand on it until you're in another world. Ms. Cindy Tanner for her answers to questions that boggled my mind for days.

Finally, I'd like to recognize the Lane Department Systems team for putting up with my endless amount of tickets and the entire Lane Department for making the last 6.5 years one of the best segments of my life. To SAIC who allowed me to keep my position and seek out the tree of knowledge and continue to learn. Lastly, I'd like to recognize WV State Police, National White Collar Crime, and NTCFA, most notably First Sergeant Chris M. Casto, Jeremiah Johnson, Michael Shoukry and, Aaron Naternicola.

Chapter 1: Introduction

1.1 Introduction

In order to search a database, the user needs knowledge of the database schema and Structured Query Language (SQL). In recent years, an effort to design and build systems that allow keyword(s) searches across database data has emerged in information retrieval. Most of the solutions utilize some sort of index structure that is either stored in R.A.M. or on a disk as a file(s) and only utilize one type of ranked retrieval model.

The issue with these systems is that they are unable to store the index structure in memory due to the size of the database or security issues. One proposed solution is creating the index structure as a table within the database that is independent of the schema of the database. By doing this, the database's database management system (DBMS) can be utilized to minimize retrieval time of the keyword(s) search.

In order to validate the effectiveness of storing an index structure in a database, this investigation will compare retrieval with index storage in R.A.M., disk, and database. The comparison will be performed by using different ranked retrieval models such as vector space, probabilistic, and language models algorithms, to retrieve the most relevant document from the index structures.

The results of the comparison for each index storage medium with different rank retrieval models will determine which storage medium is the most effective for a keyword(s) search of a relational database. By doing this, database index structures can be utilize more effectively with rank retrieval algorithms to reduce data redundancy, increase data security, and optimize searches.

1.2 Statement of Problem

Information Retrieval systems typically employ an inverted index structure when searching a collection of documents. Three different ranked retrieval algorithms are examined to determine if utilizing a database implemented inverted index is a better alternative than file or memory implemented inverted index. This is accomplished by comparing the search times and the effectiveness of these three algorithms and these three indexing implementations.

1.3 Organization

This paper is separated into six chapters with the second chapter providing details on current research in this area of study along with the basic information needed to understand this document. The third chapter discusses the theory that the statement of problem is based on. The fourth and fifth chapter layout the simulation and the data collected to either support or refute the claim made in this document regarding database implemented inverted index structures. The final chapter will discuss the results and data collected in chapter five as well as areas where this work can be expanded on in the future.

Chapter 2: Literature Review

This chapter provides a review of current research in the three main areas of Information Retrieval. The first section discusses three different relational search engine techniques developed. The second reviews the research of indexing data for retrieval. The last section discusses different retrieval models and algorithms.

2.1 Current Keyword search Database Systems

In this section an introduction to relational database search engines such as Banks[16][17], DBXplorer[15], Discover[18], Elastic Search[26], DBSight[28], and S-KWS[19]. The first class or approach is graph-based like Banks[16][17]. The second approach is schema-based like DBXplorer[15]. Finally, the third approach is index-based like R-KWS[19].

2.1.1 Graph-Based Approach

The graph-based approach has its basis in graph theory in which the database schema or structure of the data is treated as a directed data graph [16]. Nodes in the graph are considered to be a tuples and edges are the references (foreign keys) between the tuples as represented in Figure 1.

An answer to a user's search query is a sub graph of the data graph or a "rooted directed tree containing a directed path from the root to each keyword node"[16]. Banks[16] selects the ideal or prestige answer by doing a backwards expanding search. This is done by creating a backward edge from the foreign key edge. A foreign key is a key that references another value in another table. For example, an actor's name may be referenced in a movie table as the lead, which makes the actor's name a foreign key in the movie table. These backward edges have a weight value that is proportional to the number of edges of the primary node (v).

Banks[16] then utilizes an algorithm called "Backwards Expanding Search," which is based on Dijkstra's single source shortest path algorithm [16]. The process is used to find a common vertex (root) from which a forward path exists. The rank of the answer(s) is based on the summation of the weights of each of the edges, as in the example below:

Banks[16] attempts to do all processing in memory, but this uses a lot of hardware resources. Finally, the computational resources for generating the data graph and answer graphs overwhelm the CPU.

2.1. 2 Schema-Based Approach

The next approach to solving the relational database keyword search dilemma is to utilize the schema of the database. From the schema a schema graph is created, but unlike the graph-based approach, the graph is generated simply upon the tables of the database as in Figure 3.

Examples of systems that employ a schema-based approach include DBXplorer[15] and Discovery[18]. Discovery[18] uses the joining networks to find the answers to the keyword query or search. For example, a keyword query $K_q = \{\text{smith, miller}\}$ is seen as Smith \bowtie Miller in Discovery. Discovery finds the ideal solution by employing minimal joining networks trees (MJNT), which are trees of tuples in which adjacent tuples are joined via foreign key relations.

In order to find the MJNT, Discovery must first find all the candidate networks, which are tuple sets based on foreign key relationships. Due to the possibility of the candidate network growing to an enormous size, Discovery only allows candidate networks to grow to a “T” size, where “T” is the maximum size of the trees. To avoid having a candidate network achieve size “T”, Discovery prunes each candidate network by finding nodes that have no keywords.

After finding the candidate networks, they are evaluated by the plan generator. The plan generator evaluates the networks based on being a tuple set or an intermediate result defined in previous assignment. For each network there is an assignment that computes joins. Basically, the less joins a network has, the more likely it will be selected as an ideal solution.

Once the candidate networks have been evaluated, the remaining ones are sent to the execution plan. Here the candidate networks, or MJNTs, that are remaining are translated into SQL and executed. The MJNTs with the least amount of joins are returned first (ranked higher) than those with larger number of joins. At this point, Smith \bowtie Miller becomes Customers \bowtie Vendors with Smith's and Miller's rows being selected and projected to the user.

A competitor to Discovery is DBXplorer[15], which comes from the research done by Microsoft of Redmond, Washington. DBXplorer like Discovery employs a schema-based searching technique, but in a slightly different fashion. DBXplorer utilizes index structures known as symbol tables to speed up the searching of keyword(s). From the symbol table, all tables, columns, and rows are identified that contain the keyword(s).

HashVal	ColId
V ₁	C ₁
V ₂	X
V ₃	X
V ₄	X
V ₅	C ₂

Table 1: Uncompressed hash table

V ₄	C ₁
V ₂	C ₂
V ₃	C ₂
V ₄	C ₂

Table 2:
Compressed hash table

The symbol table that is utilized in DBXplorer is analogous to the HashMap data structure. Discovery and DBXplorer's processes become very similar after the identification of all tables, columns, and rows involved. DBXplorer creates joins in which all the keywords may be contained. The join trees that are formed are ranked based on the number of joins as discussed in Discovery. Once ranked, the join trees are translated into SQL and results are provided to the user just like in Discovery.

The advantages of DBXplorer and Discovery is that they are scalable to different databases and do not require keeping graph structures in memory. However, they do have the disadvantage of requiring CPU resources to process their respective tree networks to find the optimal solution.

Markowitz[19] proposed a new solution based on the same theories as DBXplorer and Discover known as S-KWS[19]. S-KWS utilizes a candidate network generator based on two principles [6]:

1. By assigning a proper expansion order to the CN, isomorphism cases can be avoided.
2. Expanding the CN from part of the node in a partial tree can reduce the number of partial results.

However, instead of following the same process as other schema-based systems, Markowitz[19] describes a process of transforming the candidate network into an operator tree that is integrated into a mesh structure to solve the problem of redundant trees or nodes by allowing sharing. The tree is optimized for query processing while the operator tree is in the mesh. Then the MJNTs are outputted and ranked according to their join size like the previous systems.

2.1.3 Information Retrieval Libraries

The third class of systems is based on Information Retrieval (IR) fundamentals that are provided by the IR libraries such as Lucene[25]. The first system we will discuss offers flexibility in the terms of dealing with traditional documents of indexing and searching, like web pages and relational database searches. Elastic Search[26] is a system that evolved out of the Compass project[27] and allows users to search multiple indexes easily with minimal setup or understanding of IR.

Its competitor, DBSight[28] is based on Lucene as well, but utilizes Apache Solr to interface with the Lucene libraries. It utilizes the speed of Lucene IR libraries, while utilizing the ease and flexibility of Apache Solr. Both of the systems utilize an inverted indexing scheme like traditional IR systems (Google) and utilize a vector space model retrieval method in which the frequency of a term in a document raises its relevancy to a user's query.

The advantages of using a Lucene-based product are ease of implementation and execution. This appears to be an almost real-time search over a relational database. However, DBSight must be purchased after a database reaches a certain capacity.

Overall, the current research in this area ranges from developing these search engines to accepting metadata information along with search terms like “Title: ‘The Raven’” in which the engine would search the title field for the poem “The Raven.” Research is attempting to create an efficient algorithm for solving the Steiner Tree problem, which requires extensive computational resources. The ideal solution would decrease the amount of computational resources required as well as the response time for search engines.

In addition, many of these systems utilize a Boolean Retrieval method in which the keyword is either contained or not contained in a document. While other systems utilize a vector space model based on a term’s frequency in a document of a given collection.

2.2 Index Research

Indexing documents, as used in Information Retrieval, is flexible and depends on the retrieval method being utilized, type of documents, and storage medium. For example: because of cost, a developer wouldn't want to store the entire document along with keywords in R.A.M., if it could be implemented in a file or a database table.

There are various index structures found in IR, such as forward (direct index), inverted index, signature files, suffix trees, and suffix arrays[22]. Forward index structures are mappings from a document ID to the list of terms that appear in the document [24]. Signature files are similar to a Bloom filter and can be used to obtain a list of documents in which a term may appear [24]. Suffix trees or suffix arrays can be used to find all occurrences of an n-gram sequence in a given text collection [24]. This structure is usually used in phrase search or regular expressions.

Most IR systems utilize an inverted index structure where the terms or tokens of the document act as the keys to a value commonly referred to as the posting list identification number. A posting list is a list of document identification numbers and each term has a posting list to keep track of what document the term occurs in. For example: there are three documents and in two of those documents the token, "Redskin," occurred. Then the inverted index and posting list would look similar to the following:

There are various types of inverted indexes that are utilized in IR. The first type of inverted index is called the DocID index, which was discussed earlier. DocID indexes are employed when the retrieval model focuses on recalling all of the documents containing the keywords instead of on the relevancy of the documents.

The DocID approach usually does not satisfy many retrieval methods, so a frequency index style is implemented. In this inverted index implementation, the index tracks the term and posting list ID. The posting list ID is a key to retrieving the correct posting list. The posting list is a linked list of all the documents containing the term and the term's document frequency. For example: a term has two documents in its posting list, and document one could have the term five times whereas document two could have the term ten times. This is a very common inverted index to see implemented in vector space models and probabilistic models, because these models incorporate term frequency into their respected scoring algorithm.

Sometimes the position of the term in a document is just as important as the occurrence of the term. For instance, if the user queried "University Maryland," without the position, then any document with "university" or "Maryland" could be considered. If the positions of the terms are kept, the retrieval method can rank documents with "University Maryland" ahead of other documents.

Inverted indexes are constructed in various ways. Some are constructed at the startup time of the IR system in R.A.M. Others maintain an active structure implemented on disk, and some combine these methods.

The construction of an inverted index can be classified as static or dynamic. Dynamic construction is when a collection either rapidly changes or is extremely large, which causes part of the index to be loaded into memory. Static construction is used on collections that don't change often or the index is small enough to fit in R.A.M.

2.2.1 Static Construction

In-Memory Construction

Static approaches to index constructions include: in-memory, sort-based construction, and merge-based index construction[24]. The first in-memory concept is where the inverted index is stored in R.A.M. and the posting list is implemented in a file[24]. The other method is interleaving, where there are two structures stored together in-memory.

When adding new data to the in-memory index, one can put new information at the back of the index. This method infers that if a term occurs late in the document, then it is of little importance. The other method is to move to the front[24]. Initially a term is added to the back of the index, but if retrieved this term is relocated to the front of the index.

Sort-Based Construction

Sort-based construction is a disk-based method that sorts in-memory index structures and organizes them into a disk structure. This data can be written onto the disk as blocks in two fashions: multiday merge operation or cascaded merge operation. The difference between the operations is one writes all blocks at once and the other writes two blocks at a time. The difficulty is selecting a time when the system doesn't require availability, because the sort-based construction method is resource intensive.

Merge-Base Construction

Merge-based construction is similar to the other constructions discussed thus far, but unlike its counterparts, the merge-based construction creates index partitions on disk. Once indexing is complete, it merges all the partitions into one index. This method is handy for extremely large collections. This construction technique usually utilizes compression due to the size of the index structure.

2.2.2 Dynamic Construction

Dynamic construction of an index is only necessary when the collection continuously updates like a State's DMV record collection. The primary concern with dynamic construction is updating the index with either batch or incremental updates. Updates can range from adding new items, modifying existing items, or removing items.

Batch Updates

Batch updates are updates that occur at certain time frames or increments. The two strategies that are associated with this update scheme are rebuild or remerge. Rmerge is based on the merge-based construction of the static index. Whereas the rebuild method reconstructs the entire index and replaces the old index structure. According to Clarke[24], if 60% of the index has been modified, then rebuilding the index is the most efficient option.

Incremental Updates

Incremental updates are more complex, but are necessary if the collection's index needs to reflect changes immediately like Amazon.com's inventory. Once again, the remerge option can be utilized to update the existing on disk index. However, if the collection is large enough and updates are frequent, then the overall effectiveness of the retrieval system can be harmed. This is due to "whenever the indexing process runs out of memory, it reads the entire index from disk, merges it with the in memory data and writes a new index back" [24].

The other option to remerge is in-place updates, which removes the need to read the entire index from disk upon every update. When a posting list is written to disk, there is some space left for a new entry. This allows for new postings to the same term to be transferred to disk at a later point by simply appending to the existing posting list.

2.2.3 Compression of Indexes

One area of increasing popularity is index compression. Index compression can be considered from many aspects; one of the most common forms of compression is removing commonly used words known as stop words. These are words such as “a,” “the,” and “they” and provide little to no help in finding relevant documents regarding a query. Removing these stop words can easily reduce the size of an index. For instance, if you have a collection with 200,000 tokens (words) and of those words, there are 16,000 unique tokens. However, of the 16,000 tokens, there are 200 words that can be considered stop words. These 200 words could throw off relevancy if a word like “not” occurs 33% of the time in the collection. By removing the stop words, the index size decreases by 200 tokens and effectiveness of the search engine improves.

Another index compression method is the pruning method, which removes redundancy from the index. Researcher David Carmel suggested one method of pruning based on uniform and term-based methods to reduce the size of the index structure [31]. Carmel investigated a way of pruning the posting list for a term when the document in the list is of little relevancy to that term. By using a cutoff value to gauge relevancy of the document, he was able to achieve 35% pruning with a slight average precision loss [31].

Another proposed compression technique for inverted indexes is to compress the docID value, which takes up an extensive amount of space in the posting list. Yan[32] describes a process based on improving a compression technique known as PFD, which is a process for decoding and encoding many numbers based on a fixed size. The improvements that Yan[32] suggests are introducing a new structure to deal with possible overflow bits. Then starting with the smallest compression size possible and increasing as needed, instead of assigning a constant compression size like before.

2.3 Models/Retrieval Methods

There has been an extensive amount of research done in this area over the past decade, but many of the retrieval methods are derived from the same principles. The three methods or models that will be discussed in this section are the vector space model, the probabilistic model, and the language model. There are many more models, but for the scope of this investigation, only knowledge of these three models is necessary.

2.3.1. Vector Space Model

One of the oldest was proposed by SMART System in the 1960s. The vector space model is sometimes called the cosine similarity method, in which two vectors, one known as document vector \vec{v}_d and another known as query vector \vec{v}_q , are compared by using the cosine function. A good example is illustrated in figure 7, which shows the different vectors and how cosine is used to find the most relevant pair.

In figure 7, α angle is smaller than angle θ and thus document 1 and the query are more similar. Whereas document two would be ranked as less similar than document one. The cosine similarity is calculated by the following:

$$\cos(\theta) = \frac{\vec{d} \cdot \vec{q}}{\|\vec{d}\| \|\vec{q}\|} \quad (2.1) [34]$$

This model utilizes the concept of weights, where each token in the query or document is assigned a weight based on a weight scheme. Most vector space models use a variation of the TF-IDF to calculate the weights.

The TF or term frequency weight segment of the TF-IDF is the frequency of the token in a particular document. If document one has football occurring twice then the TF would be two. However, there are various formulas for term frequency because the raw term frequency can distort the scores of a document.

The IDF stands for inverted document frequency which is the log of the result when the total number of collections is divided by the number of documents in which the token occurs. This allows unique terms that rarely occur in documents to be scored higher than common occurring words.

By performing the dot product of the TF with the IDF, a balance is struck between the common occurring words and rarely occurring words in a document. Below is a table of common forms that TF-IDF formulas can take.

Term Frequency		Document Frequency
Natural	$tf_{t,d}$	None	1
Logarithm	$1 + \log(tf_{t,d})$	IDF	$\log\left(\frac{N}{df_t}\right)$
Augmented	$0.5 + \frac{0.5tf_{t,d}}{\max(tf_{t,d})}$	Probability IDF	$\left\{ \max\left(0, \log\left(\frac{n - df_t}{df_t}\right)\right) \right\}$
Boolean	$\begin{cases} 1 & \text{if } tf_{t,d} > 0 \\ 0 & \text{otherwise} \end{cases}$
Log average	$\frac{1 + \log(tf_{t,d})}{1 + \log(\text{ave}(tf_{t,d}))}$

In order to incorporate this into a vector space model, the cosine equation from earlier has the TF-IDF weight scheme substituted in place of the document and query vectors d and q , which results in the following:

$$sim(d_j, q) = \frac{\vec{d_j} \cdot \vec{q}}{\|\vec{d_j}\| \|\vec{q}\|} = \frac{\sum_{i=1}^N w_{i,j} w_{i,q}}{\sqrt{\sum_{i=1}^N w_{i,j}^2} \sqrt{\sum_{i=1}^N w_{i,q}^2}} \quad (2.2) \quad [34]$$

2.3.2 Probabilistic Model

The next important model that we will be discussing is the probabilistic model, which has its roots in statistical theory and principles.

Probabilistic model is derived from “Bayes’ Rule for inverting conditional probabilities [34]”, which states:

A retrieval algorithm must be developed from the principles stated above to utilize probabilistic theory in ranked retrieval. The ranking principle states that we can rank documents by probability of relevance, but it’s only based on the data available. There are a few different algorithms that can be implemented into a retrieval system. Most algorithms are based on a traditional method known as the binary independence model; this model states that if the document is relevant to the query or token, the value of 1 is assigned and 0 if not. This model is essentially the same as the multivariate Bernoulli Naïve Bayes model [34].

In order to derive a ranking algorithm from this model to include term frequencies or other measurements of relevancy, it must be assumed that a word appearing in a document is independent of any other presence of a word appearing.

$$O(R|\vec{x}, \vec{q}) = \frac{P(R = 1|\vec{x}, \vec{q})}{P(R = 0|\vec{x}, \vec{q})} = \frac{\frac{P(R = 1|\vec{q})P(\vec{x}|R = 1, \vec{q})}{P(\vec{x}, \vec{q})}}{\frac{P(R = 0|\vec{q})P(\vec{x}|R = 0, \vec{q})}{P(\vec{x}, \vec{q})}} = \frac{P(R = 1|\vec{q})}{P(R = 0|\vec{q})} * \frac{P(\vec{x}|R = 1, \vec{q})}{P(\vec{x}|R = 0, \vec{q})} \quad (2.4) \quad [34]$$

If the possibility of a term occurring in a query is the same as not occurring, then the following can be surmised:

Relevance	Present	Not Present
1	p_t	$1 - p_t$
0	u_t	$1 - u_t$

Table 1: Relevance Probabilities [34]

Then occurrence and absent terms can be treated as the same, allowing substitution in the following equation:

$$O(R|\vec{x}, \vec{q}) = O(R|\vec{q}) * \prod_{t: X_t=q} \frac{p_t(1 - u_t)}{u_t(1 - p_t)} * \prod_{t: q_t=1} \frac{(1 - p_t)}{(1 - u_t)} \quad (2.5) \quad [34]$$

The retrieval status value or RSV, which will become the basis of all retrieval algorithms developed in the model, can be derived from this equation. By taking the log of the equation above, the following equation is derived:

$$\sum \log \left(\frac{p_t(1 - u_t)}{u_t(1 - p_t)} \right) = \log \left(\frac{p_t}{1 - p_t} \right) + \log \left(\frac{1 - u_t}{u_t} \right) \quad (2.6) \quad [34]$$

The above equation is the basis for derivation of the Best Match 25 (BM25) retrieval algorithm. BM25 has many derivations, but the one developed by Robertson and Jones will be the focus of this investigation.

$$\text{score}(D, Q) = \sum_{i=1}^n \text{IDF}(q_i) \cdot \frac{f(q_i, D) \cdot (k_1 + 1)}{f(q_i, D) + k_1 \cdot (1 - b + b \cdot \frac{|D|}{\text{avgdl}})} \quad (2.7) \quad [34]$$

The IDF segment of the equation is the same as the vector space model. The variable parameters b and k are tuning parameters that can be changed if the queries the users will be utilizing are of a certain length. For example, if there is no normalization of a query, then b = 0 and if a query is larger, then the k value is used for term frequency.

BM25 is one of the most successful retrieval algorithms that offers more precision than vector space models due to the fact that probabilistic model is a more fluid model for IR than the vector space model.

The current research in probabilistic modeling is mainly focused on improving the BM25. One recent algorithm is the BM25F, developed by Robertson and Microsoft Research [35]. This algorithm focuses on taking the structure of the document into account for scoring. Instead of computing the scores for individual fields like “title,” “author,” or “year,” Robertson offers a new view. He argues that the term frequencies can be calculated before “the non-linear term frequency is applied” [35]. This compensates for structure data whereas the original BM25 did not.

Another area of research is incorporating a proximity-based approach on probabilistic principles [36]. This model would incorporate BM25 traits with term weights and the distance of two queries. The position of a query term in a document is taken into account without having a special index structure. According to Microsoft Research, this improves BM25 on average 5% to 10%[36].

While there are other research motivations in this model, most of them center around improving BM25 or deriving new models like the Language model, which is the next retrieval model to be discussed.

2.3.3 Language Model

The language model is a unique model that attempts to capture the “language” a collection uses to better predict the most relevant document for a given query. This model improves upon pitfalls of the other two models. One example is dealing with the absence of terms in relevant documents. The language models offer a concept called smoothing, which essentially smoothes the values of a document so an absent term doesn’t cause “gaps” in the scoring of the document.

Language model can be thought of as finite automata in which the query is the automata itself, while the document is evaluated to see if it matches that automata. The more a document can generate the query parts, the greater the relevance.

The first type of language model is known as a unigram language model, which estimates all terms independently. The second type of language model is called bigram language model, which is useful for speech recognition and other machine translation. The unigram model is more useful for the purpose of text due to the lack of training data.

In the unigram language model comes the query likelihood principle, where a language model m_d is constructed based on each document d . As before with the probabilistic model, Bayes rule is utilized:

$$P(q|d) = \frac{P(q|d)P(d)}{P(q)} \quad (2.8) \quad [34]$$

Using naïve Bayes model from before and use an equivalent model known as the multinomial unigram model to construct a model which can determine the probability.

$$P(d) = \frac{L_d!}{t_{f_{t1,d}}! t_{f_{t2,d}}! \dots t_{f_{tm,d}}!} P(t_1)^{t_{f_{t1,d}}} P(t_2)^{t_{f_{t2,d}}} \dots P(t_m)^{t_{f_{tm,d}}} \quad (2.9) \quad [34]$$

$$P(q|M_d) = K_q \prod_{t \in v} P(t|M_d)^{t_{f_{t,d}}} \quad (2.10) \quad [34]$$

In order to estimate $P(q|m_d)$, a maximum likelihood estimation and a unigram model can be combined to derive equation 2.12.

$$\hat{P}(q|M_d) = \prod_{t \in q} \hat{P}_{mle}(t|M_d) = \prod_{t \in q} \frac{t_{f_{t,d}}}{L_d} \quad (2.11) \quad [34]$$

In the above equation, the term frequency and length of the document is utilized in order to estimate the probability of the document's ability to generate the query. However, the issue with using the equation above is if a term doesn't occur in the document then the value is zero. The problem is a probability of zero will throw off the language model and it will not retrieve the most relevant document. For example, if a probability of zero occurs in speech recognized algorithm, then chances are the program would fail to recognize the speech correctly.

A smoothing technique must be applied to the model to eliminate the probability of zero in relevant documents. For example, suppose the query = {King Arthur} and document one only has "Arthur" in the document. Instead of applying a zero for "King" not being in the document, a smoothing equation is applied to that segment instead. This ensures that the document is scored as most relevant.

The first type of smoothing technique is the Jelinek-Mercer (JM) smoothing method, which is a linear combination of the document information and collection information. By combining both a document level statistic and a collection level, there will never be a zero probability with this retrieval algorithm.

This equation takes into account the length of the document (L_d), term frequency of the term in the document ($tf_{t,d}$) for document level statistics and for collection level, the frequency of the term in collection (L_t) and the length of collection (L_c). The tuning variable λ is used control the influence of the document to collection level statistics. Most systems utilize a value of 0.5 [24].

The other smoothing method is the Dirichlet Smoothing [24]; this method derives from the Dirichlet Distribution [37]. Like its counterpart, Jelinek-Mercer, Dirichlet utilizes a tuning variable (μ) to distribute the collection-document level influence.

As before, the parameters are the same, but the μ variable could be changed to create an even distribution and influence the collection to document level statistics. Usually the tuning value is adaptive based on the collection and the document combined[38] or a constant value[24]. Dirichlet vs. Jelinek-Mercer investigations have shown Dirichlet tends to outperform Jelinek-Mercer [24].

Language model offers a variety of advantages over the other “bag of words” models discussed earlier in this chapter due to its adaptive nature and smoothing the scoring of the documents. Language model research varies widely, with improvements on the current methods of application to development of new language model methods.

One recent investigation proposes a topic-based language model as compared to a collection-based model. The reason for this is to obtain more accurate document retrieval and to remove the estimation of the document language model problem [39]. This investigation has shown that performing a two stage topic-based language model does outperform other language models. The problem with this investigation is it only utilized small test sets [39].

Another investigation by the University of California proposed a two stage Bigram model. This model was compared against a unigram model. This study found over 40% of the time the two stage Bigram outperformed the unigram model. The collection consisted of 11, 916 English queries [40].

Another problem with using a language model is that finding a mode that is not computationally exhaustive, while providing effective retrieval. In addition, language model retrieval methods can be more sensitive than and not as robust as the TD-IDF approaches. [41]

There have already been comparison studies of these three models, most notably the investigation done in 2006 by Sperious and Tashiro [42]. This investigation found BM25 and the language model were even, where BM25 outperformed until the language model parameter was modified [42].

Chapter 3: Theory

Chapter three will discuss the theory of different inverted index implementation. By analyzing the retrieval algorithms and index construction, an expectation can be derived.

3.1 Index Construction Time

The inverted index construction for each implementation for this investigation starts with the retrieval of the documents from a relational database. After the document is retrieved, each implementation's process is slightly different creating three unique scenarios.

3.1.1 Database Selection

Before derivation of the database retrieval can begin, a few assumptions that will assist in the derivation of the equation must be made. As stated before, it is assumed that the collection is located in a relational database management system or (RDBMS). Secondly, it is assumed that only tables exist in this database and that any views, triggers, or other components of the database can be ignored, which allows for the database schema (s) to be denoted as:

$$S = \{ t_1, t_2, \dots, t_n \} \quad (3.1)$$

Where t represents the tables in the set S of the schema. By deriving the schema, the primary and foreign keys (relationships) are identified. The relationships R are used to create the joins that binds all the tables together. Once the tables are joined, each document in the collection is a tuple that is based on the schema, thus deriving (C_r).

$$C_r = \{ t_1 \bowtie t_2 \bowtie \dots t_n \} \Rightarrow \{ R_1, R_2, \dots, R_n \} \quad (3.2)$$

In order to construct an equation for the approximate time it takes to collect the data, the following steps must be outlined:

1. Selection operation on primary key (indexed attribute) A.
2. Natural Join based on the relationships R.

The first part is fairly trivial, since most RDMBS utilize a b-tree data structure for primary keys [44]. A b-tree data structure is a binary tree that can have more than two children. A b-tree operates in $O(\log(n))$ [44] for locating and retrieving the values, which is how equation 3.3 is derived.

$$\text{Log}(n) \quad (3.3)$$

The number of tuples per relationship is simply the cross product of $N_{t_1} \times N_{t_2}$ which is N_r . However, since only the unique tuples (natural join) are of concern, the number of unique tuples must be identified. By dividing N_r by the unique tuples of each table creating a low bound and an upper bound for the total number of tuples each relationship possess is derived:

$$\frac{N_r}{\text{Unique tuples of } t_1} \leq N_r \leq \frac{N_r}{\text{Unique tuples of } t_2} \quad (3.4)$$

N_r will always be between the two bounds and because of that, N_r can replace n in equation 3.3. With the number of tuples n known, an approximation of joining these relationships can be developed. Since the joins involved are natural joins, the natural joins are created by the index nested loop join algorithm. This algorithm has the time $O(n^2)$ since it pairs the relations of table one with table two. The value of n can be replace to reflect tuples in both table one and table two, which becomes $m + n$. Thus, the following time for the join and selection of the collection:

$$T_{\text{select join}} = (m + n)^2 + \log(Nr) \quad (3.5)$$

Thus, the time it takes for the data of the collection to be collected from the database and analyzed can be approximated by equation 3.6.

$$T_{DG} = (m + n)^2 + n + \log(Nr)$$

Equation 3.6 will be used as a starting point when deriving the approximate time of constructing an index in each implementation.

(3.6)

3.1.2 R.A.M. Index Construction

R.A.M. based index implementations, typically are employed in two ways:

1. Interweaved Posting List and Inverted Index
2. Separate Posting List and Inverted Index

This investigation will focus on the separate posting list and inverted index. In addition, it will be assumed that the data structure for both is a HashMap. There are two situations that must be accounted for when constructing the overall index structure. The first one is looking up the posting list if term is already in the index. The second situation is if the term is new to the index.

In order to construct time to insert into a single structure, the following time constant is derived:

$$T_{insert} = \frac{\text{Size of Entry}}{\text{Data Rate of RAM}} \rightarrow C_{insert} \quad (3.7)$$

If the term is new to both structures then T_{insert} would simply be multiplied by 2. However, if a term already exist in the inverted index and the posting list is updated, then T_{insert} will change to reflect the inverted index lookup and the posting list insertion.

$$T_{insert\ Update} = \frac{\text{Size of Entry}}{\text{Data Rate of RAM}} + T_{lookup} \rightarrow C_{insert\ Post} + C_{insert} \quad (3.8)$$

T_{lookup} is the time it takes to lookup the entry in the inverted index, this value is usually 240ns[24]. Since the insert and the update will not vary, it can assume they are constant, thus creating equation 3.9 to approximate the R.A.M index construction time.

$$T_{RAM\ Index} \approx \sum_{i=1}^N (C_{insert\ Post} + C_{insert} + C_{insert}) \rightarrow 3C \quad (3.9)$$

Where N is the number of terms to be inserted in the index. Thus, equation 3.9 approximates the index construction time as being constant due to the consistent nature of HashMap access times.

3.1.3 Disk Index Construction

The disk index construction will take equation 3.9 as one of its factors for approximating the index construction time on a disk. The reason for this is the database implement utilizes RAM to cache the inverted index and posting list until the data is transfer to disk. Since a complete rebuild of the index is warrant when it changes more than 60% [24] and this is not a factor, the index construction will be treated as static.

Since the data is being transferred to a hard disk, the data rate of the hard disk and the size of the entry are used to determine the approximate time to write the entry to disk. Thus, to derive T_{write} , the transfer rate of the hard disk is utilized to formulatte equation 3.10.

$$T_{write} = \sum_{i=1}^N \frac{1,000,000 * (\text{Size of Entry } i)}{\frac{RPM \text{ of } HD}{60} * \text{Sectors per Track} * \text{Sector Size} * 8} \rightarrow \sum_{i=1}^N n + C_{data \text{ transfer}} \quad (3.10)$$

Where N is the number of entries needing transferred to hard disk. This becomes a constant because the data rate should not change drastically. In order to determine the complete time, the time of the R.A.M. index construction and the T_{write} time are combined to approximate hard disk index construction.

$$T_{Disk \text{ Time}} \approx T_{Ram \text{ Time}} + T_{write} \quad (3.11)$$

Thus, equation 3.11 is able to approximate the time of creating an index structure that is stored on the disk.

3.1.4 Database Index Construction

The database index construction will utilize elements of a b-tree. There will be two tables, one for the inverted index and another for the posting list. There will be some overhead time constant that is attributing to the keys and other issues. In the calculations, it is assumed that all data is committed to the database at the end of populating the inverted index and posting list.

In the derivation, the time taken to construct an R.A.M. index will be included. The R.A.M. index will act as a cache then commit the datasets to the database at once when necessary. By doing a massive commit, index construction is faster. It is also noteworthy that one benefit of utilizing DBMS, it that constraints on table prevent duplicates entries.

In the construction of the tables, the term of the inverted index and the posting id of the posting list will be the primary key or indexed value. By keeping two tables, there will be at least two writes for a new entry, one for each table. Since the database tables use a b-tree data structure for tables with a primary key, the insertion time of a b-tree can be used like in equation 3.12.

$$T_{write} = \log(n) + n \cdot \log(n) = \log(n) + n \cdot \log(n) \quad (3.12)$$

Using the write time and R.A.M. time, the following derivation of database index construction time is approximated. In equation 3.13, C is a constant that compensates for the delay due to commitment of data to the database.

$$T_{Database\ Time} \approx T_{Ram\ Time} + T_{write} + C \quad (3.13)$$

Now, an equation for every index storage location has been derived and the retrieval times for the three retrieval algorithms can be estimated.

3.2 Retrieval Time

In this section of the theory chapter, the focus will be on the effects the inverted index implementation has on each model. By deriving the common component that will be used for each implementation to model combination an estimate of time that each model's scoring algorithm will approximate.

3.2.1 Vector Space Model

The algorithm that will be analyzed in vector space model is the cosine similarity algorithm. This algorithm includes fetching posting list for each query term then scoring each document in the term's posting list. In all, this algorithm is said to be $O(n^2)$ time, which means that for all relevant query to document terms values, there are two steps that must be performed. Based on the time complexity, equation 3.14 can be derived based on the two dependent steps that are included in this scoring algorithm.

$$T_{CS} = n^2 \quad (3.14)$$

The next step is needed is to calculate the effects each storage location will have on the algorithm.

3.2.1.1 R.A.M. Storage

The R.A.M. storage location will have to different components besides the cosine similarity component. This includes the lookup time for both the term and posting list. In order to keep this equation simple, the preprocessing will be neglected, since the time required to process the users query will be minimal in comparison.

If assumed there will be two look ups per query term, one for the term and other for the posting list, T_{lookup} becomes $2 * T_{lookup}$. As before, if assumed that the lookup time for hash map does not vary largely, then $2 * T_{lookup}$ will become a constant.

$$T_{RAM VSM} \approx \sum_{i=1}^N T_{CS} + 2 * T_{lookup} \xrightarrow{yields} \sum_{i=1}^N T_{CS} + C_{lookup} \quad (3.15)$$

Where N is the number of terms in the users query, which will provides an approximate time for a retrieval system using an index structure implemented in R.A.M..

3.2.1.2 File Storage

If assumed a linear search will be performed on the file that contains both the inverted index and posting list then equation 3.16 is derived.

$$T_{File Look up} = n \quad (3.16)$$

Where file look up refers to looking up either the term or posting list. This means that there will be a file look up for the term and the posting list containing the term information. The transfer of data will need to be taken in account, which derives the equation 3.17.

$$T_{read} = n \quad (3.17)$$

Where n is the number of entries to be read, which then allows for the following derivation to occur:

$$T_{File\ VSM} \approx \sum_{i=1}^N T_{CS} + 2 * T_{File\ lookup} + T_{read} \quad (3.18)$$

3.2.1.3 Database Storage

Due to the inverted index and posting list being implemented as a table with a primary key, b-tree seek and retrieval times can be used. The seek time for a b-tree is $\log(n)$ where n is the number of entries in the b-tree.

$$T_{DB\ lookup} = \log(n) \quad (3.19)$$

This look up must be performed twice, one of the inverted index and another for the posting list. This means the look up will be multiplied by two to derive equation 3.20.

$$T_{DB\ lookup\ overall} = 2 * \log(n) \quad (3.20)$$

This in return allows for the construction of the following time approximation for an inverted index implementation with a vector space model as equation 3.21.

$$T_{DB\ VSM} \approx \sum_{i=1}^N T_{CS} + T_{DB\ lookup\ Overall} \quad (3.21)$$

3.2.2 Probabilistic Model

The probabilistic model algorithm that will be investigated is the Best Match 25 (BM 25) algorithm, which is the more popular algorithm in information retrieval. The BM 25 is $O(n)$ time for worst case scenario and derives equation 3.22.

$$T_{BM\ 25} = n \quad (3.22)$$

The equations for the storage location will be the same, but instead of vector space model time values, BM 25 will be incorporated to derive equations 3.23, 3.24, and 3.25.

$$T_{RAM\ BM} \approx \sum_{i=1}^N T_{BM25} + 2 * T_{lookup} \quad (3.23)$$

$$T_{File\ BM} \approx \sum_{i=1}^N T_{BM25} + 2 * T_{File\ lookup} + T_{read} \quad (3.24)$$

$$T_{DB\ BM} \approx \sum_{i=1}^N T_{BM\ 25} + T_{DB\ lookup\ Overall} \quad (3.25)$$

3.2.3 Language Model

The language model algorithm that will be utilized is the maximum likelihood query with a Jelinek-Mercer smoothing. The algorithm operates in $O(n)$ time and derives equation 3.26.

$$T_{LM} = n \quad (3.26)$$

As before in the probabilistic mode, the index implementation time approximations will remain the same, but the model approximations will not. Equations 3.27, 3.28, and 3.29 reflect these changes and approximate the time required for retrieval.

$$T_{RAM\ LM} \approx \sum_{i=1}^N T_{LM} + 2 * T_{lookup} \quad (3.27)$$

$$T_{File\ LM} \approx \sum_{i=1}^N T_{LM} + 2 * T_{File\ lookup} + T_{read} \quad (3.28)$$

$$T_{DB\ LM} \approx \sum_{i=1}^N T_{LM} + T_{DB\ lookup\ Overall} \quad (3.29)$$

With all equations derived to base the case studies on, an overall conclusion can be derived.

3.3 Conclusion

Based on the equations derived in this section there are two conclusions. For the index construction, it can be concluded that an index structure implemented in R.A.M. will be the fastest completed. Then the file implemented inverted index construction will be second followed by the database implemented inverted index.

Index Construction:

$$c < n + c < \log(n) + n \log(n) + c \rightarrow RAM < File < Database$$

Where n is the amount of terms being processed and c are the constants derived in the previous sections.

Retrieval:

The second conclusion is no matter what retrieval algorithm being utilized, the database implemented inverted index outperformed the file implemented inverted index. From the equations derived in the earlier sections, the following expectations are made.

$$C < 2 \log(n) < 3n + c \rightarrow RAM < Database < File$$

Thus, the b-tree data structure of the database table's provides efficiency over the file implemented inverted index.

Chapter 4: Case Studies

This chapter will discuss the setup and applications utilized. In addition, the different queries and data collected will be discussed.

4.1 Setup

For this investigation, a java 1.7 program will be utilized for performing the different experiments for this investigation. The program will handle the index construction of the three different implementations as well as the nine different retrieval scenarios. During the investigation, a MySQL 5 database and LOUD 12.04 Ubuntu machines will be utilized. In table 2 are the specifications of the servers being used during the investigation.

Operating System	Ubuntu 12.04 LTS
Memory	3GB
Processor	AMD Athlon 64 X2 Dual Core Processor 5600+ 2.8 GHZ
Hard Drive	500 GB

Table 2: System Information

There will be three different case studies that will be used during this investigation. Each case study consists of a different database with a different size and contents. Each case will utilize a different parser for tokenizing the information so that it can be indexed or compared against each case studies respective index. The following is the case study information:

Case Study	Document Count	Size of Database	Number of Tables	Number of searchable Fields
1	997	6.63 MB	4	8
2	9340	86 MB	4	4
3	40000	270.5 MB	5	6

Table 3: Case Study Information

The process of index construction is the same for each case study.

The index construction process illustrated above utilizes a white space analyzer, which breaks down the documents based on white space between the words of the documents. Once this process is complete, each word is checked to see if it is on the “stop word” list, which is a list of words that are either very common in the English language such as “The” or “a” or words that serve no relevancy with respect to the content of the collection. In order for the indexing process to be effective when being searched, all punctuation is removed from the words and the words are stemmed. The porter stemmer is a five step stemmer that reduces words to their root or base. For example, “stories” and “story” would be reduced to “stori”. Stemming was selected due to range of possible forms the user could input for one word and the demand for a high recall system. It is in this form that the word is added to the index.

Once the indexing process is complete, the collection may be searched. The process of handling a user’s query is very similar to constructing an index. The only difference is that instead of inserting the words into the index, the word’s posting list is retrieved. Once all the posting lists are retrieved, the ranked retrieval algorithm is applied to the documents. Afterwards, documents are sorted based on the score achieved based on the relevancy to the user’s query. This process is illustrated in the diagram below:

During this investigation, there will be a few numerical values that we will be collecting from each situation. The precision and recall of each query will be collected, to compare the retrieval algorithms accuracy to recall ability. To normalize the precision and recall values, the irrelevant retrieved document count, relevant not retrieved documents count, and the remaining document count will be calculated. The precision and recall values will be collected for 25 trials, while the time values will be collected for 100 trials.

After the trials, the Mean Average ranked precision and unranked precision will be calculated. The reason tracking both ranked and unranked precision is to see if any drastic difference occurs between the two and to isolate any distortions that may occur in ranked precision values.

Retrieval Algorithm	Inverted Index Implementation	Mean Average Precision	Average Retrieval Time	Mean Average Unranked Precision	Recall	Not Relevant Retrieved Count	Relevant Retrieved Count	Relevant Not Retrieved Count
Cosine Similarity	R.A.M.
	File
	Database
Best Match 25	R.A.M.
	File
	Database
Language Model	R.A.M.
	File
	Database

The mean average ranked and unranked precisions are calculated using equation 4.1, except the precision measurements aren't the same.

$$MAP(Q) = \frac{1}{|Q|} \sum_{j=1}^{|Q|} \frac{1}{m_j} \sum_{k=1}^{m_j} Precision(R_{jk}) \quad (4.1)$$

Q is the set of relevant documents and R_{jk} is the ranked or unranked retrieval results from the top results. Then m_j is a subset of the set Q .

In addition to the query data collection, the index construction times will be collected. These values will be collected for 100 trials and averaged.

One	100
Two	1000
Three	4285

Table 5: Number of Queries

4.2 Case Study One

The data that resides in this database can be classified as homogenous in which most of the data does not have punctuation, foreign language vocabulary, or error/malformed text. This case study comes from the MySQL performance and tuning collection[46] and is known as the Sakila database. This database has the following fields:

Table	Fields
Film	Title, description (desc), release year, name, length , rating
Film_Actor	No searchable field -> Join Table
Actor	First_name, last_name (combined to create actor field)
Language	Name

Table 6: Case Study One Fields

The queries used for the retrieval system and database can be seen in Appendix A.1. These queries were auto generated via a java program.

4.3 Case Study Two

The data that resides in this database as compared to the previous database is more diverse with foreign language vocabulary, lots of punctuations, duplicates, and plurals of words. Case study two is known as Movielens and is part of the MySQL performance and tuning collection[46]. This database has the following fields:

Tables	Fields
Movies	Rating, title
Users	None -> Join Table
Ages_ranges	Age_ranges
occupations	occupation

Table 7: Case Study Two Fields

The queries used for the retrieval system and database can be seen in Appendix A.2.

4.4 Case Study Three

The data that resides in this database have much longer documents, lots of punctuations, word roots, and different language vocabulary words. This database will demonstrate the importance of removing the “stop words”. In addition, illustrate the weakness of a vector space model as compared to best match 25 or language model algorithm. This case study is a subset of the IMDB database collection[47]. This database has the following fields:

Tables	Fields
Movies	Name, year, rank
Actor	Combine first_name, last_name to form actor, gender
Role	role
Movie_genres	genres

Table 8: Case Study Three Fields

The queries used for the retrieval system and database can be seen in Appendix A.3.

Chapter 5: Results

This chapter is divided into four sections; the first section displays the results from the index construction involving each storage location. Then the other sections discuss case study results for each combination discussed in the previous chapter.

5.1 Index Construction

The following are the average times collected for index construction of each case study. The averages reflect 100 trials for each case study and the different storage implementations.

5.1.1 Case Study One Indexing

The following table reflects the data collected for 100 trials of indexing case study one.

The graph below shows the relationship that forms between the indexing time and size of the collection.

The graph below shows the same increasing relationship that was displayed in the RAM graph of Figure 11.

Finally, the database indexing shows the same familiar trend that was experienced in the other indexing implementations.

The index construction time shows that as the collection size increases, the time to construction the index increases as well.

5.2Case Study One

The following section is dedicated to the results obtain from the trials of case study one database using the nine different situations.

Chapter 6: Conclusion

6.1 Conclusion

6.1.1 Index Construction Conclusion

One can conclude from the index construction phase of the investigation that the R.A.M. implemented index is constructed faster, while the database implemented index was the slowest. For each index implementation, the time needed for the index to be constructed grew. This is summed up in the following graph:

6.1.2 Query Time

The query time phase of the investigation concluded that the equations derived in the theory section. The database implemented index implemented provides quicker response times than that of file. The following graph summarizes all the query times for all three case studies.

6.1.3 Overall Conclusion

The data collected in chapter five on the precision and recall showed that the Best Match 25 and the unigram language algorithm were the more consistent than the cosine similarity algorithm. Therefore, based on the tables in chapter 5, the optimal retrieval to index implementation would be either a unigram language algorithm or the best match 25 with an inverted index stored as a table in a database. This is assuming that the document collection does not fit entirely in RAM.

6.2 Future Work

Now that the investigation has concluded, there are some extensions of this work that can be completed to enhance the information retrieval engines for a system. One area for future work is to implement a machine learning algorithm or a bigram language algorithm that develops a background to improve the precision to recall ratio. With this route, an interesting area of study is finding the minimal amount of time necessary for the system to develop a background which allows a precision percentage nearing 80 to 90% precision. In addition, one can look at the precision threshold that must be met before a background can stop being built.
